Madeleine Edqvist is member of the firm's Environment practise group and the Energy sector group. She is specialised in environment and energy law with main focus on regulatory matters and the renewable energy sector, such as matters related to wind power, solar, hydrogen, electricity networks and the energy market at large. She has also a broad experience of various industrial and infrastructure sectors and regularly advises clients in complex permitting and licensing processes before courts and authorities, as well as and in other legal proceedings. Madelene is regularly involved in advising on energy and environment law aspects in transactions, commercial contracts and projects. She is also engaged in the firm's Sustainability and ESG group and works with clients in climate and energy transition related matters.
